Why She Was Convinced That the Dead Man Was Not Her Husband. Notwithstanding she was not a dame of high degree, she was a woman of character, and there was a peculiar aggressiveness in the freckle on her nose which made the pclice officers on duty at the station house step around lively when she called on a matter of business. "I understand," she said to the sergeant, "that there's the body of a man waiting to be identified here. "It is at the morgue, madam,!' responded the sergeant, but with more suavity than is common. "Well, my husband hasn't been at home for three days, and I thought it night be him. Can you tell me what he looks like?" "Yes; but you could get a good deal more satisfaction by going to the morgue "I suppose I could," she sighed as if she felt sure she would not identify the remains as those of her husband. "Was "Oh, no, ma'am," exclaimed the sergeant. "He died suddenly. The patrolman saw him fall on the street.' "Died sudden, did he?" she asked with interest.

"Yes, ma'am." Her tone indicated that she thought the police were to blame in some way. "Well," she said, "there's no use in my going to the morgue if that's the case. It ain't my husband. He never done anything sudden in his life. He's the slowest man on earth. Goodby," and she walked out of the station house as if she were sorry about something .-Washington Star.

The People of Dads. Fierce as they are in war, the people f Dads are when at peace the gentlest of creatures, extremely devoted to their children and living a home life absolutely unknown among the Arabs. Just as in appearance so in moral character HECKEL BROS. do they excel, and the vices so common among the Moors are unknown in the nomes of the Berbers. They seem to possess none of that uncontrollable passion that is so large a feature in the Arab character, and its place is taken by affection and sincerity. Seldom marrying more than one wife, prostitution is absolutely unknown, with the result that the health of the tribe is excellent, portions of Marocco. No doubt to a great extent the moral character of the Berbers is due to the fact that their women are allowed entire liberty, do not veil their faces and mix on almost all occasions with the men. One of the first things that struck me on my arrival at Dads was the good humored and innocent chaff that passed between the men and the girls of the and still more when they brought us our food to the minzah on the houseton.
